 Timberline Lodge, OR - Here on the cusp of summer, the only skiing most people contemplate is water skiing. But Olympic winter athletes never stop thinking snow.
 There's one ski area in the U.S. where racers and snowboarders can train on real snow year-round. Correspondent Tom Banse found the U.S. National Team -- including local Olympic hopefuls -- on Oregon's Mount Hood.

Snowboarding has become such a popular sport it has now become an Olympic sport. One of the sport's up-and-coming stars is Callan Chythlook-Sifsof (Yupik/Inupiaq.) She had a breakout season last year which included winning a silver medal at the World Junior Championships in Italy and winning the Jeep King of the Mountain Tour. She is currently training at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in San Diego. What will it take for this Alaska Native to make it to the Vancouver 2010 Games? Do you get pumped about putting down a "sweet carve?"

Ocean Beauty Seafoods' Benefit Golf Tournament Benefits Hunger Relief Through SeaShare

SEATTLE, Aug. 6 /PRNewswire/ -- Ocean Beauty Seafoods wishes to thank its vendors who have given substantial support to this year's Ocean Beauty Seafoods Benefit Golf Tournament, held at Washington National Golf Club in Auburn, Washington, on August 7. Through this generous support, Ocean Beauty is able to increase the seafood industry assistance to SeaShare, so that seafood can continue to be available through the US foodbank system, reducing hunger and improving the well-being of Americans suffering from food insecurity. "Our donors have a shared sense of community, and responsibility for the stewardship and efficient utilization of our nation's resources," said Jim Harmon, SeaShare Executive Director. "In 1993 SeaShare led the effort to amend fishery management regulations in Alaska - the largest fishery in the country - to allow the retention of bycatch solely for use by hunger-relief agencies. It is an important story about a significant source of nutrition - badly needed protein - to help fight hunger. SeaShare's goal isn't just to feed people, but to use seafood to feed people well."

NBC Sports Offers Snowboarding for X Games Fans

Athens, GA (Mar 6, 2008) - The email here has been filled with emails from fans angry at the Fox affiliate in San Diego for not giving any coverage to the recent Winter X Games. Perhaps NBC Sports taped coverage of the Visa Snowboard Cross World Cup Saturday at 2 p.m. EST will help sooth their nerves. According to a news release from NBC Sports, the broadcast features all the competitive intensity of the men's and women's snowboard cross (SBX) finals and team snowboard cross events from Whiteface Mountain Ski Center outside Lake Placid, NY.

Top U.S. snowboard cross athletes competing include 2006 Olympic gold medalist Seth Wescott (Maine), 2005 World and U.S. National champion Lindsey Jacobellis (Vt.), 2008 FIS World Cup silver medalist Shaun Palmer (Calif.) and three time X games gold medalist Nate Holland (Calif.). In addition to the individual snowboard cross events, which will determine the U.S. SBX Champion, this year's World Cup features a new event called team SBX. In team SBX, men and women are paired in two separate events, and when one teammate crosses the finish line, it triggers the start gate at the top of the mountain for the other teammate to begin. Jacobellis and Callan Chythlook-Sifsof (Alaska) pair up in the women's team SBX events, while Holland and Graham Watanabe (Idaho) team up against the men. NBC's Pat Parnell, Todd Richards, and Tina Dixon will call the action.

None has been hotter than X Games gold medalist Jacobellis, coming off her fourth World Cup win of the season in Quebec and going for a sixth consecutive Jeep King of the Mountain victory to defend her crown. Resting in second is Susanne Moll of Austria, with numerous FIS wins and an Austrian National Championship on her solid resume. In third is Callan Chythlook-Sifsof of Girdwood, Alaska, ranked No. 15 in the world and a member of the U.S. team, followed by Joanie Anderson of South Lake Tahoe, a 2007 X Games gold medalist.*

Idaho Mountain Express and Guide - Besides Shaun White, if any one person is immediately identifiable with the sport of snowboarding it is American Lindsey Jacobellis, whose winning resume is as long and flashy as her curly blond hair. Just last Friday, the X-Games champion notched her fourth World Cup win of the season at a snowboard cross competition at Stoneham, Quebec. Jacobellis' win extended her lead in the overall World Cup standings and put her within 150 points of snowboard cross World Cup leader Maelle Ricker, who finished second. Jacobellis all but has the Jeep King of the Mountain overall title wrapped up with a commanding 110-point lead over U.S. teammate Callan Chythlook-Sifsof.
